Madeleine Lindley Training & Conference Centre, Oldham, OL9 9XA

Recognised for our significant involvement in the development of the EYFS and Birth to Three Matters as well as our contribution to the EYFS review, we are dedicated to making early education better for young children and those who work with them. A company with a reputation for providing high quality, affordable training, to early years schools, nurseries and settings, we know this course will be a 'breath of fresh air' for all early years practitioners. How do we know? Because delegates have told us our training is outstanding:

'An excellent day all round and one of the best value training events I have attended. The materials provided gave me a clear overview and will help me remember the detail long after the event.'
(Independent Early Years Consultant)

'I have received some excellent feedback from staff and they all found it extremely useful. The training was exactly as I had hoped and.. presented in a non-threatening, informative manner. I will not hesitate to recommend you to others.'

The EYFS is changing! Led by Ann Langston, who supported Dame Clare Tickell's Review of the EYFS, and Early Years Matters team members, this course will involve participants in exploring ways to create environments that will support young children's learning in the revised EYFS, addressing the new EYFS principle: A Positive Environment.

This course will provide opportunities to:

- Understand the role of the environment as the 'third teacher' in the revised EYFS through explorations of continuous and enhanced provision
- Consider how a positive, enabling environment can support learning in the Prime and Specific areas of the revised EYFS framework
- Identify and explore the conditions for learning that reflect children's needs, build their confidence and ensure their potential is developed throughout the early years and into Key Stage One
- Explore practical ways to develop your current learning environment to maximise its potential
